Arab Publishers' Association

Arab Publishers' Association (APA) is an Arab professional, non-profit association with financial and administrative autonomy established by the League of Arab States decision No. 37 of 4/4/1962, and reestablished in General Conference for Arab Publishers held in Beirut on April 12-13, 1995.

This association consists of Arab publishers Unions, each represented by a member in the Association's board of members, in addition to the members of the general assembly that elects an equal number of representatives of the countries participating in the association.

The association's board of directors currently constitutes of 33 members, 17 of them representing the Arab publishers' unions while the remaining 16 were elected by the general assembly (the general conference) which was held in Cairo.

The association functions through specialized committees at the headquarters of the general secretariat in Beirut and the presidency's office in Cairo.

The Arab publishers' Association is an independent regional organization representing the Arab publishers in front of Arab and international official authorities and in front of corresponding unions and professional associations, as well as various civil society institutions interested in culture and defending the freedom of expression, publishing and reading.

The main objective of the association is to defend and develop the Arab publishing industry, to protect intellectual property rights, and to defend Arab culture and all its components.

To review the objectives of the association, please read the basic regulations of the association.

ICOC

As an Arab publisher, I commit to the following:

1. My commitment to the issues of the Arab nation and its heritage and the values of its culture and civilization and to honour the demands of this commitment.
2. My commitment to raising the standards of the publishing profession and maintaining its values and its respectable professional traditions and to contribute to setting practical rules and regulations that will eventually establish traditions for the profession.
3. Respecting all the rights of publishing, writing, and creativity and preserving them from any violation, cooperating with colleagues and every other party preventing such violation. I shall also commit to refraining from covering up or condoning such violations by repressing relevant information, and I shall treat such actions as a crime against the honour of the profession, even before classifying it as an offense against the rights of the individual.
4. Strengthening ties with authors by respecting their rights, regulating the relationship with them according to contracts and clear data, earning their trust as a means of cooperation to stand united in the face of cultural decline, knowledge failure, and social reluctance to read.
5. Strengthening ties with fellow publishers and promoting the spirit of cooperation and solidarity amongst them, and benefiting from the multiplicity to encourage the competition for the best, especially given the significant demand for more serious publishers to fill the wide cultural gaps in society.
6. Fully commit the basic rules and regulations with respect to the decisions made by the association. And considering professional solidarity the ideal means to promote the publishing profession and the effective barrier against the challenges and intellectual invasion facing our nation.
